

Home

You are here > Natural Resources > Using the Latest Science and Technology

EIS/OEIS

Using the Latest Science and Technology

Documents and References

Navy Training and Testing

The National Environmental Policy Act process gives the Navy an opportunity to review and assess its activities, ensuring that the benefits of recent scientific and technological advances are applied toward analyzing potential environmental effects. As part of this process, scientists compiled and analyzed all currently available data and research with a focus on understanding species distribution, abundance and movement patterns, as well as potential effects from underwater activities. Examples of available information include:

Natural Resources

Protecting Marine Resources

Navy's Ongoing Mitigation Measures

Using the Latest Science and Technology

Commercial Fishing and Recreational Interests

Get Involved

Marine Resource Assessments

Density and Abundance Estimates

Scientific Literature and Study Results

Sound Propagation and Effects Modeling

Site Map

Login

Search the Site

 Search:

Go

Copyright 2010 U.S. Navy